I Introduction

A reference can be cited as a parenthetical remark such that the author's name is not included directly in the prose (Thaer 1942). Alternatively, a source can be cited as a noun in the sentence, such as when the work of Thaer (1942) compels us to cite him. For such circumstances, footnotes are not necessary.¹

The Taisei Sankei 大成算經 is a 20 volume text composed by Seki Takakazu 関孝和 (? – 1708), Takebe Katakira 建部賢明 (1661 – 1716), and Takebe Katahiro 建部賢弘 (1664 – 1739).

II First Section

Fundamental numbers The “fundamental numbers” 基数 are introduced in the Preliminary Volume of the Taisei Sankei. In the table below, we include these numerals along with Arabic numerals for reference. They are as follows:

¹ Footnotes are only used when the author wants to make some remarks, which, for whatever reason are not included in the main text. Sometimes these remarks also include references (Thaer 1942, 200).

A new paragraph in the footnote.
